

Counterfoil runs the places that sell time.

Tickets, sessions, courts and tours — sold at the counter, checked at the gate and reconciled by close.

THE PROBLEM

Venues sell time with tools built for shelves.

A retail till knows a product. It doesn't know 18:00.

A court sold twice for the same hour
Two teams arrive. One goes home.

A tour sold with no guide free
The booking stands; the tour does not.

A ticket nobody at the gate can check
A paper stub passes from hand to hand.

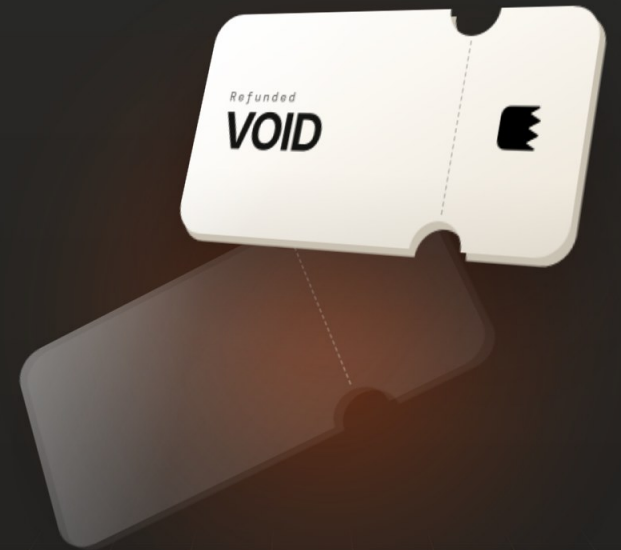

"Is 18:00 still free?"

Asked at every counter, every day — and answered by a spreadsheet, a WhatsApp group and a guess.

AT THE COUNTER

Paper stubs, a generic till, and a cash box that never quite adds up.

THE PRODUCT

One system, from the office to the gate.

OS runs the business on the web. Go sells and admits on a tablet or a phone.

✓ Same catalogue

What OS sets up is what Go sells.

✓ Same capacity

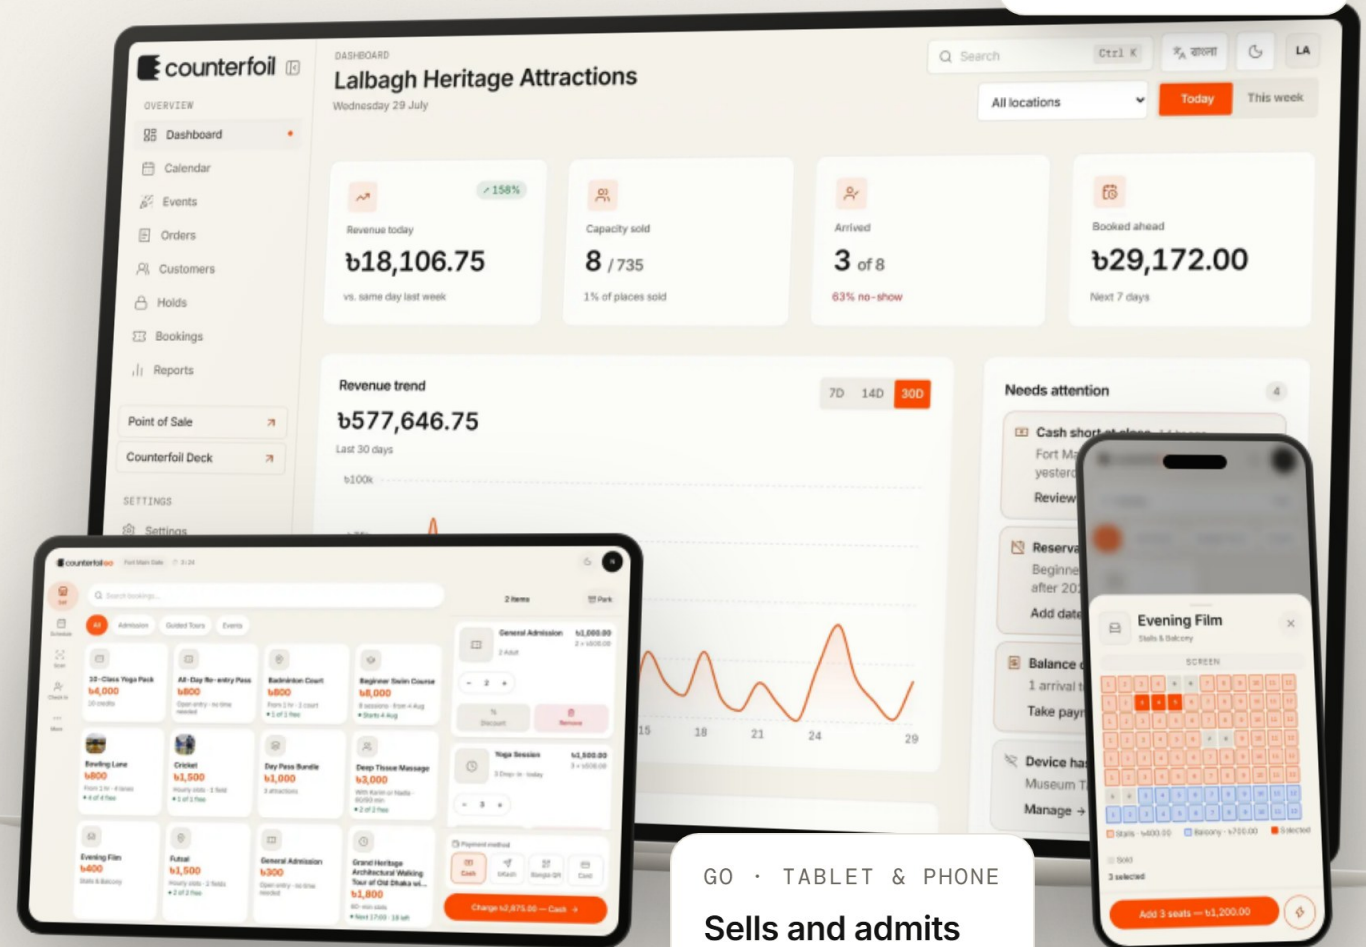

A place sold at one counter is gone at every other.

✓ Same ledger

Every sale lands in the reports as it happens.

WHAT A TILE SAYS

- Next 17:00 · 18 left
- Limited · 3 of 20 left today
- Next Fri 31 Jul 10:00

The diagram illustrates the three-step booking process for a bowling alley:

- 1 A show: Select the day and the session; each one says how many seats are left. The interface shows three sessions: 11:00, 11:45, and 12:30, each with 40 seats available and a price of £400.00.
- 2 A cinema: Pick the seats on the map; stalls and balcony price themselves. The interface shows a seat map with stalls (orange) and balcony (blue) seating. Seats 3, 4, and 5 in the first row of stalls are selected (red).
- 3 A lane: Say how long, which lane and when — or tap Start now. The interface shows the selection of a lane (Any, Lane 1, Lane 2, Lane 3, Lane 4), duration (1 hr), and time (Today, Tomorrow, Fri, Sat, Sun). The 'Start now' button is highlighted.

Take the money, however it comes.

- 1 Check the cart
Change a quantity, add a discount, park it for later.
- 2 Cash
Tap Exact or a note; the change is worked out.
- 3 bKash or Bangla QR
Confirmed with the transaction ID before the sale lands.
